1 Lucina from Elworthy Studio was made by placing pieces of woven fabric on top of a sheet of light-sensitive photographic paper, then layering glass on top. By leaving the items in sunlight for a period of time, the light penetrates the woven fabric, leaving an impression of the woven texture and threads. ELWORTHYSTUDIO.COM

2 Newmor's Watercolour Geometric collection is a large-scale fusion of geometrics and watercolors where indigo and opalescent shades combine with a hazy, weathered surface that fade into a vertical ombré effect. NEWMOR.COM

3 Influenced by Japanese crushing techniques and the interaction of dye with the peaks and valleys of creased paper, Mesa from Maya Romanoff is available in a rich, natural color palette, including gray agate (pictured), with a matte, contemporary finish. MAYAROMANOFF.COM

4 Astek's Surface Collection NYC Edition—inspired by aged surfaces from around New York City's neighborhoods—features the industrial and urban look of wood, metal, and concrete as in the Bushwick pattern in Char (pictured). ASTEKWALLCOVERING.COM
